Frequently Asked LETTERS Questions —

Does a self-published book qualify for membership?

Yes, but it must have an ISBN#, or an ASIN# for electronic publication, and a royalty statement or proof that readers have paid for copies of your work. Please note: a printout from your book showing its availability on Amazon or some other website is not enough. You must show that you have received payment for the work.

Does an article written for The Pen Woman magazine or other magazines for which I have not been paid count towards letters qualification?

No. Such articles can be used in applying for Associate Membership, but not Active Membership. Some journals and magazines do pay contributors with free copies for articles or poems and in this case, these would qualify.

What about blog writing?

Blog writing, though published, would not qualify unless the applicant could show that she is paid by readers or is hired to write a blog for others.

Would facilitating a creative writing or non-fiction writing workshop qualify?

Yes, if the applicant was paid for her work.

Writing accepted by the Pen Women Press?

Yes, this qualifies because copies are sold to benefit the League.

Is there a time limit on the publication dates for material submitted?

No. Work published at any time in the past is eligible for consideration.

I have published my artwork in catalogues and brochures with my own written description and inspiration article about my work. Would this qualify?

Yes, if you provide samples of this writing and can show that you sold any of these artworks.

I've written many prose pieces and poetry and done poetry readings for fundraisers, as a volunteer, and received free admission to events based on my participation, but I did not receive payment directly.

Would any of this qualify?

Yes, if you provide samples of the writing and some form of printed proof that you participated in the event, such as your name on the program.
